SUBJECT: KAZAKHSTAN: ALMATY NOTES, JANUARY 28 - FEBRUARY 8, 2008

¶1. The "Almaty Notes" series is intended to maintain focus on developments in civil society, the media, and the opposition in Kazakhstan's "southern capital" following the move of the Embassy to Astana.

Comments on President's State of the Nation Address

¶2. Political party leaders expressed various opinions about President Nazarbayev's state of the nation address. National Social Democratic Party chairman Zharmakhan Tuyakbay said "I have not been inspired. The address included many good words, but it is doubtful whether they will come true. Practically nothing has been said about political reforms." Auly leader Gani Kaliyev agreed with Tuyakbay, saying that he had heard nothing new. Patriot Party leader (and Senator) Gani Kasymov said he very much appreciated Nazarbayev's announcement that additional funds would be allocated to build hospitals, schools, and sports facilities. Maslikhat Candidate Loses his Case
-----

¶3. On February 5, the Supreme Court rejected an appeal from Sergey Utkin, who had run as an independent candidate for the Almaty city maslikhat (i.e., the local legislative body). Utkin had challenged the results of the August 18, 2007 election, claiming that electoral protocols he had obtained from 10 out of the 11 election precincts proved that he had won his race. District and city courts previously denied Utkin's appeals and confirmed the official results, according to which Utkin lost to a candidate from President Nazarbayev's Nur Otan party. Utkin has the right to file a second appeal with the Supreme Court. (Interfax, February 5)

Communist Leader Proposes One-Chamber Parliament

¶4. "Because the current two-chamber parliament is not efficient, we have proposed setting up a one-chamber parliament," Communist Party leader Serikbolsyn Abdildin told a press conference in Almaty on February 5. This proposal was one of several that the Communists submitted to the Central Election Commission pertaining to amendments to Kazakhstan's election law. (Note: The Central Election Commission recently solicited input on amendments to the election law from all political parties. End Note.) The Communists also proposed that only half of parliamentary deputies be elected through a nationwide proportional party list system, with the other half elected in majoritarian territorial districts. They further proposed that city and oblast akims be elected through direct elections. Abdildin added that in order to "allow Kazakhstan to chair the OSCE in 2010 with dignity," the constitutional amendment which allows Nazarbayev to be continually re-elected without term limits should be annulled. (TAN TV channel and Interfax, February 5)
